

A Sermon for “Climate in the Pulpit Sunday” by Claire McBride

September 15,
2019

The Fourteenth Sunday after Pentecost

Claire McBride spoke on how her own journey led her to understand that she is not separate from the earth. She said it is easy to get parched, to fall into despair and grief around climate change, but there is still room for great hope. Noting that climate justice is interwoven with all other justice issues, she reminded the congregation of God’s promise in Revelation 21, “Behold, I am making all things new.”

The text of this sermon is not available at this time.