

Art Gallery

Our gallery reflects ideals we hold dear as a faith community, which at its heart is an invitation to all to explore Creation. Art making is one of the most precious of human expressions as a gift from the Creator. Art has the power to open hearts to a vision larger than ourselves, break down barriers between people, beautify our environment, and challenge us to think in new ways.

The art we show comes from a variety of individuals from within our faith community and the wider community, as well as group shows that represent underserved and underexposed people in the wider world.

To join our mailing list email sandra@seekerschurch.org with a request to be notified of coming shows.

Carole Alden, Untitled – Part
3 Bars Triptych

In collaboration with The Justice Arts Coalition, a national network and resource for those creating art in and around the criminal legal system, the Seekers Church Art Gallery is pleased to present a show of Artists Behind Bars. This group exhibition exemplifies the spirit of the artists who work under far less than ideal circumstance, often with a very limited variety of materials. Many of the artists are self-taught; some working from internal visions, other from resources in the prison or jail library, and yet others have had formal training in or out of the carceral system. This show includes drawings and paintings and is the first show in a series we plan to show over the next several years. For more information about individual works, please contact wendy@thejusticeartscoalition.org.
